

The House on Amity Street • A Tale for Kids of All Ages.

Frank Proto

Working Script: 11/03/22

Note: The narrator (storyteller) can be Tony or Toni)

I want to tell you about something that happened to me and my brother Willie when we were kids back home in Fudgeville Ohio. It was a long time ago, but I remember it like it was yesterday.

There wasn't much special about Fudgeville when we grew up there back in the 1980s - except for maybe that big old wooden frame house over on Amity Street. That house had been there for as long as anyone could remember.

(Music cue)

It was immense - I mean really huge! Almost a perfect square, three stories high with a lavish attic above the third floor. There was a porch that ran around the entire first floor and a great wooden door that must have been almost ten-feet high. Three wide steps led down from the porch to a wide, circular driveway that must have been used by those fancy horse-drawn carriages the original owners used for getting around back in 1870 or 80 something. A massive twelve-foot high fence surrounded the entire property.

The owner of the house was Robert Prichard, not the friendliest soul in Fudgeville.

Old man Prichard had also lived in that house for longer than anyone could remember.

My father told me that his father told him that Mr. Prichard was living there even when he was a kid!

No one ever saw visitors entering or leaving the house, and if any of the neighborhood kids got too close they'd be chased away with a stern warning.

It all started on a cold December afternoon. Willie had been playing at Jimmy Nichols' house and mom sent me over to get him. The sun had already disappeared, and Willie didn't have enough clothes on and was feeling the cold as we walked home. It's over a mile from Jimmy's house to ours but Willie said he knew a short cut that would get us home faster. “I know where there’s a hole in the fence that goes around the big old house. We could be home in half the time.”

“Forget it Willie. We’re not taking any shortcuts. If old man Prichard sees us we’ll be in for it!”

“But Tony, I’m freezing and it’s getting dark. He’s probably inside keeping warm. He’ll never see us with those windows all boarded up!”

“Willie! When are you going to learn to wear the right clothes?” I began.

But before I could finish he darted between some bushes whispering loudly: “There it is Tony! Come on, we’ll be through and out the other end in less than 2 minutes!” “Willie no!”

But he was through the fence before I could take another breath. I ran after him, tearing through the bushes and scooting through the hole in the fence.

He was waiting for me just inside. “Follow me,” All we have to do is go around the house.”

“Around the house!? How are we going to get around the house without old man Prichard hearing us?”

“Don’t worry about it, I’ve done this a million times. All you have to do is creep around the corner real slowly and make sure you don’t bang into anything.”

Before I could reply he was on his hands and knees crawling around the side of the building.

It was really getting dark now. We were so far from the entrance that the streetlights were no help at all. He turned and whispered, “Shh, follow me.” I felt my foot catch on something. A muffled smash interrupted the stillness as I grabbed the side of a trash can.

We froze with our eyes opened so wide that if we dared to move they’d pop right out of their sockets. “I knew we shouldn’t have done this.” “Don’t worry Tony, just keep following me,” he replied. We advanced about 6 feet when I heard a short, quiet click.

I grabbed at Willie and tapped him on the leg. “What’s wrong?” he whispered.

I replied with some wild hand signals to stop and shut up. I could see a look of distress beginning to come over his face.

Silence in the night. We were about to start to move again, when there was another noise. The sound of a door slowly opening.

A deep voice thundered, "Who's there!?"

"Run!" screamed Willie.

I bolted after him.

Not being able to see more than a couple of feet in front of us I had no idea of where we were headed.

I just stayed right on his tail. But after circling the house twice, I realized he didn't know what he was doing.

Reining him in I squealed, "Willie! There's got to be another way out of here!" But before he could answer we heard old man Prichard 'round the corner closest to us. We blasted off again. But this time hwe tripped on something that sent us both flying into a bunch of trash cans, causing a tremendous crash.

We lay stunned for a couple of seconds but recovered quickly as we heard the old man approaching.

By some stroke of luck we had landed right in front of a little cubbyhole in the side of the house.

We stood, totally petrified, not daring to even breath. Old man Prichard walked right by us and came to a stop barely 15 feet away. We remained frozen.

As we waited to see what the enemy would do next, our eyes adjusted to the dark and we could just make out where we were.

Willie noticed it first . . . a door within the alcove we were trapped in. He reached for the door latch while I clutched him as tightly and quietly as possible. But my move wasn't quite silent enough.

The old man must have heard it because we could hear his footsteps coming in our direction.

Panic-stricken, Willie heaved the door open.

As he yanked me inside old man Prichard shrieked, "No! Don't go in there!"

We flew through the door and slammed it shut.

We found ourselves at the top of a flight of stairs and knowing that the old man would be coming through the door any second, we tore down the steps, crashed through another door at the bottom landing and paused to catch our breath .

Blackness again. Silence again. Fear quickly overwhelmed me. “We’ve got to get out of here Willie.” For once he didn’t argue. He peeped back, “OK, Tony.”

We waited. And waited. Why hasn’t he come for us? Surely he knows we’re somewhere in his basement. Our wait seemed endless.

Then I saw it. I was crawling around some large object, way too dark to make out.

Something caught my eye. There was a thin sliver of light that seemed to be floating high up in the air. “Willie come here , look at this!”

“What is it?” he asked. “Dunno, but it’s so high. Maybe it’s on the ceiling. Let’s see if we can get closer.”

We started to inch our way toward the light. We didn’t crawl very far before running into a wide, wooden object, which seemed to have another similar object attached directly above but slightly behind it. We felt around and discovered still another, then another!

“Stairs!” cried Willie. We had found the staircase!

Willie was already halfway up when I screeched in a loud whisper, “No! The light’s on up there! Old man Prichard is probably waiting for us!” Which sent Willie scampering back down.

“Let’s sneak up there and just listen a little, If we don’t hear anything, we could open the door and make a run for it.” “OK, Tony!”

We held each other’s hands and began our climb to the top of the stairs, moving as quietly as possible. We got about halfway up when we both stopped.

“Do you hear that?” “Yeah, it sounds like . . .” “Music!” I said.

As we continued up the steps the music grew louder and louder. We reached the top and tried to find a keyhole or something to peek in. But there was none. We placed our heads against the door and listened. Wow! It was really loud now. We pressed tighter and tighter against the door and nearly fell down as the door slid open!

PART 2

We're in a huge magnificent room totally awash in candlelight! An orchestra is playing, people are laughing and dancing everywhere. It's a great holiday feast. Look! The dancers are getting faster and wilder!

Everywhere I turn I see things that are so different. Men with beards and great mustaches – and women dressed in the most elaborate gowns. The sounds of real live music that I've never heard before!

Right next to us a window looks out to the front of the house. I can't believe what I'm seeing! The entrance way is lighted with gas lamps, and there's a long line of elegant horse-drawn carriages all along the driveway down to the street. Where is Amity Street? It should be right outside the gate, but the road there is much too narrow and the surface is dirt! What is happening!?

I'm getting so tired. All this running around is really getting to me. I see Willie is already asleep next to me on the floor. I should stay awake. Old man Prichard is sure to come by any minute but . . . I'm so . . . so . . . sleepy. I'll just close my eyes for a minute.

I don't know how long I was out for. When I opened my eyes there was a young man about my age staring straight at me.

He had a smile on his face and looked friendly. In fact he looked kind of familiar. I looked down at Willie who was still asleep, but was beginning to stir.

The big room was quiet now, but the candles still illuminated it. "Hi," I said, "Wh. . .what's going on? Who're you?"

He smiled and answered, "I'm Bobby."

I spotted a small photograph of an impressive-looking man with a full beard wearing a military coat. Everyone seemed to have beards around here. It was autographed, but I couldn't make out the signature.

"Who's that?" I asked Bobby. "Why that's President Grant," he smiled.

“Ulysses S. Grant, our 18th president? Wow! It looks like it was just printed.”

Bobby’s smile grew brighter as he replied, “Yes, It’s an original, Mr. Brady gave it to us a couple of weeks ago.”

I laughed at his joke, “You pick it up on E-Bay or something? Boy an original Matthew Brady print must be worth a fortune, and this one looks almost new!” Bobby looked puzzled, “What-Bay?”

Of course it’s almost new. Mr. Brady took it just a few months ago when President Grant stopped here on his way to visit home.”

He was serious, not joking at all. “But that’s impossible, Grant became President in 1869 and this is . . .” But before I could finish Bobby interrupted, “1872.”

Things were starting to make a weird sort of sense. The photograph, the horse-drawn carriages, Amity Street, where it’s always tough to park, is a dirt road. Not a hint of electricity – everything lit with candles. . . I stared at Bobby, “This is the year 1872? You mean we’ve traveled back over a hundred years!?”

Bobby nodded slowly, as Willie, now awake and having caught the last part of our conversation squealed, “What’s going on Tony? let’s go home!”

A frowning, extremely large, rather nasty-looking woman appeared and growled, “Bobby Prichard, did you let these two through the door?”

Bobby answered fearfully, “I’m sorry Aunt May, I tried to stop them but they stepped through before I could do anything!”

Willie, now even more terrified insisted “Tony? I wanna’ go home!”

Aunt May scolded Bobby, “You know they’ll have to stay now. We can’t let them return!”

I watched Bobby sadly nod as Willie, who was now beside himself wined, “Tony, let’s go!”

As Aunt May and Bobby turned away to confer among themselves, I grabbed Willie and whispered through clenched teeth, “We’ve got to get downstairs and find our way out the same way we came in. On my signal no matter what I do, run for the basement. Got it?” He nodded.

As Aunt May came closer and began, “I’m sorry, but once someone arrives here from another time period we just can’t allow them to . . .”

That’s all I had to hear. I shoved her as hard as I could, knocking both her and Bobby down while shouting, “Now!”

Willy sprinted for the door and was through it in a flash while I took off in the opposite direction. While Bobby helped Aunt May to her feet, I took a few extra seconds to grab a couple of candles before heading for the basement.

The upstairs door flew open. Bobby whizzed down the steps, but Aunt May, who couldn’t move very fast had to take one at a time.

I smothered my candle as well as I could, but Bobby saw immediately and was on me in no time. He clutched me and extinguished the candle all in one brisk move.

He dragged me a few feet to another door, shoved me through and said: “Wait here!”

After he took off I regained my senses and looked around.

I was at the foot of the stairs that led to the outside door! A few seconds latter he arrived back carrying Willie, who was flailing and kicking wildly as Bobby, with his hand cupping Willie’s mouth, tossed him through the door. “Quickly! Up the steps!” he whispered, as we heard Aunt May closing in on us.

He slammed the door. We flew toward our last hurdle, reached the door, turned the handle and pulled.

It was stuck! We pulled again, with all our might! Nothing. But worse, the downstairs door was now open and Aunt May was lumbering up the stairs!

We were about to be caught!

Suddenly the door began to open! It seemed impossible, but never mind, Aunt May was just now reaching the top step as we were pulled through the opening by two strong hands.

The cold December air greeted us. We were out, and back in our own time.

Willie stood motionless, staring, unable to speak. I started to reassure him that everything was OK when I turned and found myself staring straight into the eyes of old man Prichard!

Those eyes. They looked so familiar. They were kind eyes. Where had I seen them before?

“Mr. Pr . . . Prichard, wh wh . . we’re sorry . . .” I began.

But he put his hand on my shoulder and smiled, “You two have had quite a little trip haven’t you.”

Of course! These were the hands that pulled us through the door. But there was something else about him.

“Mr. Prich. . . Bobby? Are you . . .”

But before I could finish he smiled again, “Well, you know my secret now don’t you.”

I stood there for a second with my mouth wide open. Then he said gently, “Now you kids get on home before it gets too late.” Then he wandered around to the other side of the house.

It turned out that after that day no one ever saw the old man around again. Willie is convinced that Mr. Prichard – or Bobby still lives somewhere inside the house and probably sees Matthew Brady and maybe even President Grant from time to time.

As for me; well I bought the house a few years ago and even though I don’t live in it, I’m just going to make sure that it remains exactly as it is for a long time to come. And who knows, maybe when I get really old I’ll let myself in through that little door on the side that leads down to the basement and . . .
